The Quiet Achiever

At the age of 52, in 1985, Jenny Sages turned to fulltime art making. For the preceding 30 years she had worked in commercial art as a freelance writer and illustrator, but the conversion to serious art was both sudden and total. She took part in an outback workshop with Clifton Pugh and while travelling in the Bungles and experiencing the overwhelming beauty of the place while painting her gouaches, she realised there could be no turning back. She describes her conversion as being "overnight" and subsequently there has been a string of art awards, including this year's Wynne Prize and a prestigious acquisition by the National Portrait Gallery.
